TERRITORIAL.

From our Exchanges.

Sheriff Gabriel has directed that his third of the reward, paid for the capture of Grimes and Hawley, be expended in building a fence around Andy Hall's grave and in putting up a tombstone. And if more money shall be needed to fit up the grave in good style Mr. Gabriel will furnish it. This is a generous act and shows that when Mr. Gabriel is a friend he is a friend indeed.

South Pioneer district is being flooded with people going in from all sections. There are three hoisting works in operation, and two mills are in transit for the camp. At the 200 foot level last week silver was struck in a large vein in the South Pioneer.

The Tevis gold mine is showing up more interesting every day. The tunnel is now in fifty feet. It is the intention of the owners to make a new road from the mine to Tevison, and ship ore on the Southern Pacific to the Benson Smelting Works.

The union of the Arizona and Sonora roads will be celebrated on the 25th, on the line, where the last spike will be driven. A few days thereafter, a grand excursion to Guaymas will take place, when a large number of the press of the country will join in the occasion.

An injunction to prevent the Copper Queen mine from working on abandoned ground, was served on it by the Copper Prince on Thursday last. The injunction does not extend to the principal workings of the Copper Queen.

He Didn't Know.

A Western Congressman who was on his way home stopped off at a small town in Ohio for several hours, and while there was approached by a farmer, who asked:

"What's wool going to be worth this season?"
"Indeed, I do not know."
"Wheat going to be higher?"
"I can't say."
"Do you look for a rise in oats or taters?"
"I have not given them a thought."

"Well, do you think we'd better hold on to corn and hay for a spell yet?"
"I can't advise you, friend."
"You are in Congress, ain't you?"
"Yes, sir."

"And you help to run the Government?"
"To some extent."

"And this 'ere country in the hands of men who can't even tell whether cranberries will turn out half a crop, or buckwheat sell at fifty cents or five dollars a hundred! Good day, sir. No wonder this country is wrong side up half the time."

He Took the Leather Medal.

"What a queer noise clams will sometimes make," remarked the manager of a clam abattoir in a prominent restaurant yesterday. "Yes," said a long-nosed stranger standing near; "but it's a fact that the musical abilities of the clam are not fully appreciated. When I lived on Coney Island, before it became the watering place it now is, I managed a clam quartet. You look as if you do not believe it. I had no trouble in obtaining a basso, tenor and alto, but I was obliged to import a delicate Little Neck clam to sing soprano. I built a sort of tide gate for my performers, and they were so well trained that they would come out on a sort of platform that I had built and render 'Auld Lang Syne' with all the gravity and more musically than the average church choir."

"Why didn't you travel with them," asked the clam butcher. "That's what makes me sad. On a summer morning the soprano got some sand in her throat and before help could be summoned the Little Neck had departed. One of the saddest sights I had ever witnessed was when the surviving members gathered around and sang an impressive dirge. I opened the tide gate and within thirty minutes the survivors had departed, carrying the remains of the soprano with them."

"Sam," said the toysterman; "here he is. I knew he would come." And Sam produced a delicate medal of leather, on which was inscribed: "To the most accomplished liar on American soil."

Under the Circumstances.

A citizen who yesterday received a telegram to meet a friend from the western part of the state at the depot, was there on time, and after the greeting said to him:

"Now we'll get on the car and go up to the house."
"But you are not keeping house?"
"No; I'm boarding at the same old place."
"Then I can't go."
"Can't? What's the matter?"
"No; under the circumstances I should not like to eat dinner with you."

"What circumstances?"
"Well, Trover's present wife used to be my wife. We didn't exactly agree, and she got a divorce and came down here and married him."

"Why, that's nothing. Such a trifle as that wouldn't stop me."
"Yes, I know; but I'd rather not go. I've applied for a divorce from the wife I married after this one left me, and she is in town, too; and if I should meet the pair up there I don't believe I could eat half a dinner—really I couldn't."

Georgia Hospitality.

As I got beyond Rossville, in riding out to the battle field of Chickamauga, it began to rain, and the way the thunder roared and lightning flashed, and the flood-gates opened was appalling. A farmer just over the Georgia line beckoned me in out of the wet, and there I stuck from one o'clock until dark. It was a steady storm, without a break for a minute, and as there were no signs of its clearing up before midnight the man said I had better stay all night. It looked that way to me, too; but it was a log house with only one room, and only two beds for the twelve of us. There were six children, some half-grown, the farmer and his wife, an old woman, a son-in-law, a young woman and myself. It looked as if some of us would have to stand up to sleep, and along about nine o'clock I began to get nervous. Perhaps the man noticed it, for soon after that hour he said:

"Stranger, we'll step out and look at the weather."

We went to the barn and after a look at the horses, returned and found the women in one bed and the light out.

"Shake off and jump into t'other bed," whispered the man, and I followed directions. I was no sooner in than he followed. Then came the young man, then the old one, and then three boys lay across our feet, the upper one resting across my knee. It was impossible to turn or move, but in ten minutes all were snoring away as if that were their usual way of going to bed. I heard the clock strike eleven, twelve, one and two, and was finally dozing off, when someone opened the door, walked in, and began to undress. The noise aroused the farmer, who carefully called out:

"Who's that?"
"Me!"
"Who's me?"
"Jim Baker."
"Oh, Jim, eh! Want to stay all night?"
"I reckon."
"Well, strip off and pile in between the fast, two on the front; there's only four of us lyin' len'thwise!"

Jim piled in without another word being said, and was soon asleep; and as I was sliding silently out to finish the night on the floor, the farmer sleepily queried:

"That you, Tom? Pull off your bates and slip in here—lots of room left yet!"

A Child Worth Her Weight in Gold.

A few years ago a steamer was coming from California. The cry of "Fire! fire!" suddenly thrilled every heart. Every effort was made to stay the flames, but in vain. It soon became evident that the ship must be lost. The burning mass was headed for shore, which was not far off.

A passenger was seen buckling his belt of gold around his waist, ready to plunge into the waves. Just then a pleading voice arrested him—

"Please, sir, can you swim?"
A child's blue eyes were piercing into his deepest soul as he looked down upon her.

"Yes, child, I can swim."
"Well, sir, won't you please save me?"

"I can not do both," he thought. "I must save the child, and lose the gold. But a moment ago I was anxious for the whole ship's company; now I am debating whether I shall exchange human life for paltry gold."

Unbuckling the belt, he cash it from him, and said, "Yes, little girl, I will try to save you." Stooping down he bade her clasp her hands around his neck.

"Thus, child, not so tight as to choke me. There, hang on, now, and I will try to make land."

The child bowed herself on his broad shoulders, and clung to her deliverer. With a heart thrice strengthened and an arm thrice nerved, he struck out for shore. Wave after wave washed over them. Still the brave man held out, and the dear child on, until a mighty mountain billow swept the sweet treasure from his embrace, and cast him senseless on the bleak rocks. Kind hands ministered to him. Recovering his consciousness, the form of the dear child met his earnest gaze, bending over him with more than angel ministrations, and blessing him with mute but eloquent benedictions.
